Health group welcomes its new chief executive

DIANELLA Community Health has welcomed Dr Neil Cowen as its new chief executive.

Dr Cowen joined the organisation about two months ago, taking over from Veronica Jamison, who now heads Bass Coast Regional Health in South Gippsland.

He has a range of experience across the community health sector, having served as chief executive on several rural and metropolitan services.

Dr Cowen also chairs DASSI, a disability and support service, and is a director of the Mental Illness Fellowship of Victoria.

He is now overseeing the development of Hume's GP super clinic in Coleraine St, Broadmeadows, which will offer a range of health services under the one roof.

"Our aim is to streamline and strengthen the range of top level health services available to the people of Broadmeadows. This allows Dianella to provide its committed and professional staff the best facilities in which to deliver quality care to local people," he said.

"I am enormously pleased to be part of such an impressive and committed organisation of health care professionals and top-level services."

The super clinic will open in February.
